A.J.C. Head Says United States Lax On Arabs, Fails To Use Prestige For Peace

The head of the American Jewish Committee expressed concern over what he said was the failure of the United States to utilize "its prestige and power" for achieving peace between the Arab nations and Israel.

Herbert B. Ehrmann, president of the Committee, said that "the impression is gaining that we have unintentionally postponed the possibility of real peace or even that we have increased the chances of actual warfare," says the New York Times. He spoke at a dinner of the annual meeting at the Commodore Hotel.

Noting that the "hostile acts" by Arab states against Israel had been publicly disapproved by the United States, Mr. Ehrmann said that nevertheless, in various Government departments and affiliated agencies, "there appears to be an acceptance of these illegal acts." The acts, he held, have "encouraged more and bolder steps toward an ultimate and perhaps violent conclusion."

He cited the refusal of Arab nations to permit the loading or unloading of American cargo at an Arab port if the ship had stopped at an Israeli port. He called attention to the World Bank's grant of $50,000,000 to the United Arab Republic to improve the Suez Canal despite the refusal to open the "canal to vessels of non-Israeli registry, which have loaded at an Israeli port."

At the same time, Mr. Ehrmann praised the United States for its "genuine friendship and aid" for the whole Mideast and particularly Israel. He emphasized that Arabs and Jews "have lived together for centuries in peace." He said "great potentialities still reside in the Arab breast; they await only the touch of contact with other peoples and freedom from the back-breaking and exhausting labors of their bare existence."

He urged Arab leaders to: "break out of the prison of your own propaganda and lead your people toward a life in which their energies and spirits will be released for creative effort."

Former Senator Herbert H. Lehman, an honorary vice-president of the A. J. C., presented the Committee's American Liberties Medallion to Dean Erwin N. Griswold, of Harvard University's Law School, says the New York Herald Tribune. Dean Griswold was cited for his "courageous" defense of the Fifth Amendment at a time "the atmosphere in the United States and even within the legal profession itself was [illegible] with [illegible] of freedom under law for exceptional advancement of the principles of liberty and equality."

The Committee presented its first Institute of Human Relations award, a plaque, to the National Broadcasting Company for "outstanding leadership in promoting man's understanding of his fellow man in television and for the notable production of 'Destiny's Tot,'" which dealt with the story of the psychoanalysis of an anti-Semitic hatemonger by a Jewish psychologist.

Robert W. Sarnoff, chairman of N.B.C.'s board, accepted the award from William Rosenwald, chairman of the agency's national advisory council.

Dr. Abraham J. Heschel, Professor of Jewish Ethics at the Jewish Theological Seminary, decried the emphasis on conformity today, adding that man "is not motivated anymore, he is being propelled; he does not strive anymore, he is being driven," says the New York Times. Jacob Blaustein, honorary president of the Committee, warned that in the face of Soviet aid to the Arab countries, "Israel's military position may be declining."

Pupils In U. S. Jewish Schools Rose 131 Per Cent In 10 Years

A rise of 131 per cent in enrolment in Jewish Sunday and week-day schools during the last decade was reported in the sixty-first edition of the "American Jewish Year Book." The number of pupils grew from 329,000 ten years ago to almost 854,000. During the same period, the Jewish population in the U.S. increased by about 15 to 20 per cent.

The year book is a 674-page compilation of Jewish population data, communal affairs, civil rights and liberties, religion, anti-Jewish agitation, and Jewish activities throughout the world, says the New York Herald Tribune. It is published by the American Jewish Committee and the Jewish Publication Society, with Morris Fine and Milton Himmelfarb as editors.

About 5,867,000 Jews, of whom 80 per cent are native-born, live in the United States, the year book said. This compares with 1,000,000 at the turn of the century, when two-thirds of the Jewish population were immigrants.

The report stated that the rise in Jewish education "reflects the new interest in religious education" among Americans generally. Sunday school enrollment rose within ten years from 120,396 to

Israel Ready To Pay For Peace, Says Ambassador

Ambassador Avraham Harman of Israel declared that his nation "is ready for peace at any time and is willing to pay the price for it. But one price we will never pay is the price of national suicide," he added. "That is the negation of peace." Mr. Harman spoke to Congregation Bnai Jeshurun, on West Eighty-eighth Street, in New York, on the occasion of the twelfth year of Israel's independence. To maintain peace, Mr. Harman said, Israel is ready to adapt its policies to the needs and aspirations of its neighboring countries, but they, in return, must recognize Israel's needs and aspirations.

"The price for peace is negotiation," he went on. "We are always ready for negotiation, no matter how difficult, for the sake of peace. But in this world peace will not go to the weak.

"We will get peace by self-defense as long as peace is withheld from us. Self-defense is a cardinal policy of Israel and will continue to be until we have a

Soviet "Comrades Court" Tries Rabbi For Religion

A rabbi, two assistants, and a former rabbi have been brought before a "Comrades Court" in a Moldavian village, accused and apparently found guilty of "teaching pupils to pray, holding conversations of 'doubtful political character;' of misappropriating synagogue funds, and "many, many other things."

As far as is known in Moscow, this is the first time a "Comrades Court" has sat in judgment on a case involving religion says Tom Lambert, of the New York Herald Tribune. "Comrades Courts" are panels of citizens which stage hearings on other citizens charged by still other citizens with such transgressions as absenteeism from work, shirking on the job, drunkenness, roudyism, quarreling publicly. It is not known if the Moldavian "Comrades Courts" have such power.

"Soviet Moldavia," Communist party organ in the Moldavian Soviet Socialist Republic, indicated in the April 28 edition that the "Comrades Court" had recommended the four men be held up to public ridicule, contempt and scorn.

The paper did not elaborate on the "conversations of doubtful political character" which the accused allegedly held, nor did it outline "many other things," charged against them.

"Soviet Moldavia" quoted a citizen who testified against the accused as saying the trial was not an act of anti-Semitism but a proceeding "against parasites, those who are preventing the development of our society."

The journal said Rabbi Simkh [illegible] and two assistants and [illegible] were tried by a "Comrades Court" in a motion picture theater in the village of Falesecht before an overflow crowd which became indignant toward the accused as witnesses testified against them. The journal's account indicated there were no sympathetic witnesses nor any who tried to defend the accused.

Various witnesses accused Simkh Taper and Rachmil Draznin of "infecting our best pupils in school with religious poison" and counseling students to hide their religious belief when in public, of slandering a woman who demurred when asked to contribute for the synagogue, of attempted usury, and of asking a large sum to bury a dead woman, "Soviet Moldavia" reported.

One witness was quoted as declaring the Jewish religion fundamentally "not only reactionary but nationalistic," says the New York Herald Tribune. The witness also was quoted as saying that certain Jewish religious practices are "barbarous and incompatible with Socialist (Communist) humanism and morals" and with suggesting the Jewish community in Faleshti be kept under closer public scrutiny.

$5-Week Immigrant Rose To Restore Textile Center

Mack Kahn, textile manufacturer and philanthropist, died at his home, 345 Ocean Avenue, Lawrence, L. I., New York, of a coronary thrombosis. He was 62 years old. Through Artistic Foundations, Inc., a holding company at 417 Fifth Avenue, Mr. Kahn controlled about fifteen textile mills, says the New York Times. The mills operated at all stages of the textile business, from wool tops to the finished product.

Mr. Kahn played a key role in revitalizing the textile industry of Manchester, N. H., after the city's mills had shut down and moved to the South to take adantage of cheaper labor costs and new plants. He went to Manchester in 1941, bought four mills, modernized them and thus restored the city to the position it once held as one of New England's leading textile centers.

Ten years later, the Manchester community celebrated Mack Kahn Day on October 31, 1951, in honor of the man who had helped put the city back on its feet. In addition to the Manchester mills, Mr. Kahn controlled textile and garment factories in Kulpmont and Wyoming, Pt., Lymansville, R. I., and Suncook, N. H., a southeastern suburb of Concord. In 1952, Mr. Kahn was the nation's largest individual buyer of wool tops.

A native of Kiev, Russia, Mr. Kahn came to the United States in 1915 and started to work at $5 a week in a Malden, Mass., knitting mill. After service in World War I, he used $1,500 of his Army savings to start a brassiere and corset company that became Flexees, Inc., about 1930.

From the time he put the brand name Flexees on the market, Mr. Kahn spent [illegible] to make the brand one of the best-known in the United States. He was a charter member and former director of the Associated Corset and Brassiere Manufacturers.

He established the Mack Kahn Foundation, a trust fund, and a Mack Kahn Chair in History at Brandeis University, says the New York Times.

Surviving are his widow, Sophie; twins, James, of Los Angeles and Mrs. Sandra Silverman, of Waban, Mass.; and twin grandchildren, Laurie and Thomas James Silverman.

Woman Leader Kept Up Family Aims On Welfare

Mrs. Sara Straus Hess, of 875 Park Avenue, a social-welfare leader and a philanthropist, died in New York Hospital, after a short illness. Her age was 81. She was the widow of Dr. Alfred F. Hess, pediatrician, renowned for his service in overcoming the childhood disease of rickets.

Born in New York, Mrs. Hess was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isidor and Ida Blum Straus, philanthropists, who lost their lives when the Titantic sank in 1912, says the New York Times. She was a sister of the late Jesse I. Straus, former Ambassador to France; and of the late Percy S. and Herbert N. Straus, all of whom had been officers of R. H. Macy & Co. She was a niece of Nathan Straus, philanthropist and former New York Park Commissioner, and Oscar S. Straus, former Minister to Turkey.

Mrs. Hess attended Bryn Mawr College and received an A.B. degree from Barnard. A club leader at the Jewish Educational Alliance at the turn of the century, she also was a founder and director of the former Clinton Hall. She had served on the American Committee of the School for International Studies in Geneva, and had been an officer of the Women's Democratic Union.

She had belonged to the League of Women Voters, the League of Nations Association, and the Foreign Policy Association. Mrs. Hess' clubs had included the Women's City, Women's University, Barnard and Bryn Mawr.

Mrs. Hess, a trustee for many years of Barnard College, also had been active in Bryn Mawr College alumnae events. She was president of the Tuberculosis Preventorium for Children at Farmingdale, N.J.; a trustee of Beth Israel Hospital and a governor of the Menninger Foundation.

She had served on the board of managers of Greenwich House and the Bellevue Training School for Nurses. In World War II Mrs. Hess was Greater New York chairman of the American Women's Voluntary Services, of which she was later national vice president and program chairman, and was active in the British War Relief Society, says the New York Times. She was a supporter of

NOTICE to motor vehicles act violators

Arrest without warrant is permitted under the Motor Vehicles Act, in certain predetermined cases.

For infractions that come under the criminal code (drunkenness, impaired faculties, dangerous driving, etc.) not only can the police officer arrest the driver, but it is his duty to get him off the road.

If a policeman finds that you have violated any provision of the Highway Code (particularly speeding, illegal parking by night, careless passing, consuming alcoholic beverages in a motor vehicle parked or in motion, throwing bottles or other articles, passing or crossing a school bus that is taking-on or letting-off children), the policeman will stop you immediately, give you a summons, and require you to sign a document by which you are ordered to appear before a judge at the time and place indicated. This is your notice to appear.

You are thus accused and will have the right to defend yourself before the court.

If you refuse to sign such a document the officer has the right to arrest you at once.

If you fail to appear you may be found guilty and fined not only on the original charge, but also on an additional one.

Above all, don't be tempted to bribe the officer. This could prove costly, as it is an offense under the criminal code.

By driving prudently everywhere and at all times, you will save yourself a great deal of trouble. Don't forget this.

Hunger: The Fight In Israel Against Malnutrition Which Is Everywhere

BY JUDY SHEPARD

Hunger eludes definition. Where there is not enough food, as in India, it shows itself in pipe-stem arms and swollen bellies. Where there is the wrong kind of food, it shows itself in rickets, or goiter, or anemia, or decreased vigor, or a school-child's dullness and inattention. This kind of hunger is called malnutrition and it is universal. There is malnutrition everywhere in Israel.

As with many of the problems which stalk the country, malnutrition is an import; it is involved to a large extent with mass immigration. In many cases, it is the result of the food habits of under-developed Eastern lands where bread, rice, and oil represent not simply staples but practically the entire diet of much of the population. In almost all cases, it stems from ignorance or poverty or both. In a transition camp not far from Lydda Airport, a small slender Iraqi stares at the trampled ground outside his shack and gives his report; he is a baker's assistant, earns IL.150 a month, (IL.100 less than the national average wage); has four children. He pays for electricity and water, shells out for income tax, carfare to and from home, and many other items.

"What do we eat? I work in a bakery. We eat lots of bread." And yet his wife could buy cheap, nourishing food, if she but knew of its existence. Family X came from Morocco ten years ago, moved eight years later from a camp to an immigrant housing development near Jerusalem; father, arthritic, mother, pregnant with her eighth baby. Of six surviving children, five are under 14 years of age; a sixteen-year-old daughter works as a housemaid and brings up IL.90 (about $45) a month, and this, with a small monthly relief check, represents the entire earnings of the family. Their food budget, obviously, is low, but the diet need not be as unbalanced as it is.

A black picture? No darker than the picture the world over, says the woman who directs Israel's active battle against malnutrition. She is Dr. Sara Bavly, the Dutch-born, American-educated nutritionist who is director of the nutrition department of the Ministry of Education and Culture. "Every country has malnutrition," Dr. Bavly explains, "including the United States, where there is a great deal in the South, Italy, Portugal, Greece, and the whole of the Balkans are worse off than Israel. All of the Mediterranean area has a tremendous problem of under-nourishment. And we are doing more than the others. We are ahead in handling and mastering the problem."

The first steps toward eventual victory over under-nourishment in Israel were taken long before the days of mass immigration. In 1923, when there were comparatively few Jews in the country, Miss Henrietta Szold appealed to Hadassah for "Hanukah gelt" in the form of pennies to help provide school luncheons for needy children. This "penny luncheon fund" was, through the decades, to grow into a Government-operated service providing nutritionally-balanced meals to 180,000 children a day. This is the second largest item in the budget of the Department of Education.

There were only 1,000 children on the school lunch lists throughout Palestine in 1930, the year when Dr. Bavly, newly returned from post-graduate studies in nutrition, at Columbia University, founded Hadassah's Nutrition Department in Jerusalem and took over direction of the luncheon program. "Teaching kitchens" were set up in elementary schools, and both boys and girls were organized into squads which, under a teacher's guidance, actually prepared and served the luncheons according to the principals of nutrition taught in the classes.

By World War II, the Hadassah luncheon program had already proven itself. Needy children in elementary schools throughout Palestine were helping to prepare nourishing lunches, learning to serve them attractively and, most important, bringing their newfound knowledge of what constitutes good nutrition into their own homes. But the program really came into its own after 1948 in the days of mass immigration. Monthly, thousands of newcomers from all over the world poured into Israel. There was little money, heavy food rationing. Many of the immigrant children showed signs of the deprivation of the European war years or the chronic malnutrition of the Arab

In qualifying for membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations, publishers are doing more than providing advertisers with the facts about the circulation of their publications.

They are also giving active support to the principle that advertising space should be bought and sold only on the basis of verified information — a principle that has contributed in large measure to the interests of all advertisers.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is not affiliated by membership with any group or organization and which had the distinction of being a member of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

A Glance At The Casablanca Mellah

BY MAURICE CARR, OF THE JERUSALEM POST

A problem has to be acknowledged before it can be solved. A case in point is the hitherto undisclosed influx into Casablanca of 30,000 Jewish refugees from small towns, from villages in the mountains and in the confines of the Sahara. Why, then, this rush from the "bled" to the big city? The incoming Jews are not habitual wanderers, easily given to flight. They and their ancestors — for the most part pure-blooded Berbers who embraced Judaism before the Arabs came to Morocco at the turn of the eighth century — have lived in one place from time immemorial. Today they are being driven from their ancestral house by want and insecurity.

He flees to Casablanca. In that stronghold of progressive Moroccan nationalism he knows he is safe. There, moreover, he and his family will not starve. The chances are that he will not find any work — he has no skills to speak of, and better men than he are unemployed — but at least he can survive on the pennyworth of charity.

All is relative, and even in Casablanca pauperism among the 110,000 Jews — altogether the Moroccan Jewish population is estimated at 210,000 — is so extensive that 65 per cent of the Jewish dead have to be buried at the expense of the community.

The need is so great that, without the massive financial aid furnished by the American Joint Distribution Committee, thousands and tens of thousands of Jews would just drop dead of hunger. There is no graveyard on earth more overcrowded than the "mellah", but its inmates are today very much alive and kicking. The Sabbath in the "mellah" is respected like a queen.

Now, the "mellah" child is born into a nightmare world. Several generations of one family lodge in a single room. Here the dying and the suckling, the couples in wedlock and their numerous offspring, all sleep together, usually on the floor, on mattresses or rags which are rolled away during the daytime. Privacy is unknown in the foul dwellings overcrowded to suffocation from garret to cellar.

The cooking is done on charcoal braziers in the common courtyard. The water has to be fetched from a pump or fountain in the tumultuous alleyways. There is no fresh air, little light, abundant disease, endless privation and total promiscuity in the "mellahs".

The only easy escape from this squalor is the recourse to superstition — the flight of the imagination into a realm inhabited by the monstrous jinn — or the indulgence in vice with its more carnal demons. Nine out of ten Moroccan Jews have only the barest wherewithal to keep body and soul together. Still they display immense vitality, real Jewish vitality, the sort that enabled the People of the Book to emerge triumphant from two millennia of martyrdom.

Episode In Jerusalem Thirty Years Ago

BY ELIAHU BEN-HORIN

As we now are celebrating the twelfth anniversary of the State of Israel, my memory takes me back to a time — three decades ago — when the vision of a sovereign Jewish State was far from reality and the reality was mostly sad and often tragic. In 1929, this writer was the acting editor-in-chief of Doar Hayom, the only Hebrew daily in Jerusalem. In August of that year, Arab mobs, incited and organized by the Mufti of Jerusalem, Amin el Husseini, attacked Jewish settlements, colonies and city suburbs all over the country. Scores of Jews were massacred. Many were wounded. Jewish property was pillaged and set on fire.

The attitude of the British Administration of Palestine was one of so called "neutrality" and "objectivity." Unbelievable as it may sound, the British rulers of the Holy Land not only failed to provide protection for the besieged communities, but they actually punished with equal severity the Jewish members of the self-defense and the attacking Arabs. Indeed, in some cases they bent backward, showing extreme leniency to the Arab marauders but not to Jews caught with arms in their hands.

The Jews were caught between the hammer and the anvil. If they remained passive in the face of the Arab attacks, they were risking an enormous loss of life, as well as surrender of their political positions and hopes to Arab nationalism. If, on the other hand, the Haganah (the clandestine Jewish self-defense organization) took up arms to withstand the Arab onslaughts, British police and troops would descend on the Jewish settlements in punitive expeditions, search for arms and jail the defenders.

Under the circumstances, the Hebrew press in Palestine was, of course, very critical of the Administration. It was only natural for British officialdom to be resentful of the daily attacks in the Hebrew press. The more so, because in those days British colonial officials were still looking down at the "native" — whether Hebrew, Arab, Hindu, or Burmese — and were not inclined to grant him the right to criticize the superior Englishman.

At the height of the disturbances, Doar Hayom published an article of mine under the title Ani Horagti ("I have killed"). It opened with a statement, addressed to the High Commissioner of Palestine and the Chief of Police, to the effect that on such a date I was in the trenches of the Haganah in Talpioth (an outlying suburb of Jerusalem) and on such a date I was in the trenches of Mozza (a colony just outside of Jerusalem), etc. that on each occasion I had a rifle in my hands, aimed at attacking Arabs, and that I had killed whomever I managed to hit. I suggested that I be arrested so that I might share the fate of other members of the Haganah.

The article created a sensation. My father, who lived in Tel Aviv at the time, almost fainted with fright. He was certain that I would be arrested in a matter of hours. To this day — after all these years — there are people in Israel who, when they meet me and hear my name, say: "Oh, you are the man who wrote Ani Horagti."

Several days passed after the article appeared. It was late on a Thursday evening. In the editorial rooms of Doar Hayom, on the second floor of the Hasodel Building, three editors — Abba Achimeir, Michaeli and I — were laboring on the material which would go into the front page of the next day's paper. The Friday edition in Palestine — like the Sunday edition here — was the main issue of the week, double the size of any weekday paper.

Abba Achimeir was speaking on the telephone to Haifa, Michaeli was translating from the Arab newspapers, while I was putting the finishing touches to an editorial. At about 10:30 p.m., we were interrupted by Ettinger, one of the machinists of the Hasolel Printing Press which was located in the basement.

Ettinger, tall, heavy, red-cheeked, was as a rule the personification of cheerfulness. But not this time. As he suddenly materialized on the doorstep of our office, he was extremely pale. He started mumbling something that none of us could understand. Finally, he came out with it. The Governor of Jerusalem, accompanied by armed police and soldiers, was downstairs in the printing shop. He had sent him, Ettinger, to fetch the editor.

After telling Ettinger to take hold of himself, I started down the stairs, with Achimeir and Michaeli following close behind. As I descended the steps leading into the basement, Mr. Edward Keith-Roach, the British Governor of the Holy City, stood facing the entrance. He was swaying slightly on his feet, but made no move to come towards me. He was waiting confidently — while surrounded by policemen and soldiers — for me to approach him. He neither greeted me nor introduced himself. All he said, or rather spit from between clenched teeth, was: "Who are you?"

I stated my name and position on the paper. Even then, the Governor did not find it necessary to declare the purpose of his visit nor to produce any written order. He merely told me that I should order the workers to stop all machines. I did so.

"What is this?" he asked, pointing to high piles of printed newspapers.

"The inside pages of tomorrow's issue," I replied.

The Governor turned to one of the police officers and ordered him to have the printed newspapers loaded into the police cars. As chance would have it, the side street where the Hasolel Building was situated was under repair. Consequently, the police cars had to park on Jaffa Road, Jerusalem's main street, one block away. Dutifully, the policemen started carrying the papers down the street.

In the Hasolel Building, there was nothing to remind us of the usual noise and activity of the closing hour. With linotypes and the printing press at a standstill, a strange silence descended upon the place. The workers stood in groups watching us. Achimeir and Michaeli must have been somewhere in the background, for I lost sight of them for the moment.

The Governor, on the other hand, was very much in evidence. He was standing near the little desk, close to the door leading into the street, which was usually occupied by our night proofreader, Mr. Stern. Proof sheets and handwritten copy were scattered all over the desk. (In those days, we had very few Hebrew typewriters and most of the copy in Palestine's newspapers was written by hand.) Mr. Stern was standing idly by.

He was a short man, not much over five feet, in his middle thirties, with the tired eyes of a proofreader covered by thick lenses. So thin and frail, almost fragile. Stern looked like a man who had never indulged in physical exercise and who had never dared to fill his lungs with fresh air.

I, too, was standing in that corner, not far from Mr. Keith-Roach, silently observing the Governor and the operation which he was commanding, when it dawned on me that the man was drunk. The smell of liquor from his breath was unmistakable. This also explained why he swayed all the time — all six feet of him, clad in a tan suit and topped by an arrogant face and a yellow-reddish head of hair.

The policemen, in the meantime, had been carrying their loads down to Jaffa Road. Because of the distance, it was necessarily a slow process — much too slow for the Governor's taste. He eyes fell on little Stern: "You there start carrying papers."

Stern, the soul of timidity and meekness, promptly moved towards the nearest pile of papers, but I stopped him: "Ein zu khovatkha loseit itonim bishvil ha'moshel." As promptly, he returned to his corner.

The Governor, who did not understand Hebrew, addressed me now: "What did you say to him?" "I told Mr. Stern," I said, "that it was not his duty to carry newspapers for you."

"You said that, did you? In that case, you carry!"

"It so happens that my job here is to edit the Doar Hayom, but why don't you carry them yourself?"

The Governor, intoxicated as he was, completely lost control of himself. Such impertinence on the part of a "native" editor was more than he could take. In a shrill voice he shouted at me:

"Jerusalem is under martial law. I can arrest you for that."

"That you can do," I answered quietly.

And he did. He called two policemen, ordering them to take me away. I was not even allowed to fetch my jacket from the office upstairs. Achimeir, who materialized from the interior of the basement when he heard the Governor's shouting, gave me his jacket. I was led away, down to Jaffa Road, put in a police car and rushed to prison, in the Russian Compound — a few blocks farther on Jaffa Road.

By the time I was booked and ushered into a cell it was well after midnight. But for a very dim light in the corner, the cell was in complete darkness. I had no way of knowing whether there were any other occupants and who they were. However, the noise of the opening and closing of the door put an end to my doubts. I heard a voice — in Hebrew — inquiring who I was. I soon learned that I had six cellmates, all of them members of the Haganah. They were eager to have the latest news of what was happening in the country, and I gladly obliged. We talked in undertones for a long time until we finally fell asleep. The Governor of Jerusalem was kind enough to fulfill the wish I had expressed in Ani Horagti. I was in prison, in the company of my friends from the Haganah.

My imprisonment, however, was not to last long. I stayed there only overnight. By next morning, the Governor had sobered up and realized that my arrest was unwarranted, and, what is more, it was likely to increase the popularity of Doar Hayom and of its editor. A police officer therefore appeared in prison at 9 a.m. on Friday with an order from the

ABC and HIGH STANDARDS GO TOGETHER

In qualifying for membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations, publishers are doing more than providing advertisers with the facts about the circulation of their publications. They are also giving active support to the principle that advertising space should be bought and sold only on the basis of verified information — a principle that has contributed in large measure to the interests of all advertisers.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is not sponsored by a group or an organization and which had the distinction of being a member of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

a challenge down the ages . . . and one that has been met in Quebec by the National Union since 1944 with mounting success and achievement.

At the unbelievable rate of 6 new schools a week for 10 years the need has been met . . . more than 20,000 modern classrooms in which to train the minds of the coming generations in the new techniques of the 20th century.

And at the level of higher education, after planning and travail against seemingly insurmountable odds . . . a formula for aid to higher education that is already being lauded across the country as 'the only way' to more and better educational opportunities for more young men and women . . . The problem of university grants has been settled to the satisfaction of all, a solution proposed by Hon. Paul Sauvé and finalized by Premier Antonio Barrette. PLUS — a trade and specialized school setup of over 90 institutions that is the envy of every other province, and is fitting thousands of Quebec youth for their place in the modern world . . . a place in which they can make their way . . . through the skills at their command.

W.J.C. Official, Seeks Nazis, Meets One

An official of the World Jewish Congress in New York, which is seeking Nazi war criminals, recently came face to face with one. This was revealed in a memorandum to the World Jewish Congress Executive outlining steps taken by the global Jewish organization to trace war criminals sought by West German prosecuting authorities for the mass murder of Jews in concentration camps. Eye-witnesses are still being sought to crimes committed in the following concentration camps or ghettos: Majdanek; Flossenburg; Mielec; Holeishow b/Pilsen; Budzyn; Biela-Bielitz; Rzeszow; Wadowitz; Zdolbunow; Rembertov (Zelonka); Tomaszow-Mazowieck; Neu Sandez; Lublin; Sabibor; Grodno; Bialistok; and ghettos and camps in Lithuania.

The meeting with the Nazi took place "in an office of the West German organization dealing with property losses by Jews from the so-called 'expulsion areas', regions from which Germans were expelled after the last war. The head of the office had prepared a detailed report for the meeting. He appeared genuinely disturbed by the small number of applications. He asked that those eligible be informed, and he requested assistance in faster adjudication of claims. Very recently he was arrested as a former member of an SS Einsatzkommando (Shock Troops), which shot large numbers of persons in the Ukraine during the last war."

According to the report, appeals by the WJC for witnesses have resulted in former Nazi victims coming forward from all parts of the world. Some of them now live in the U.S.A. Argentina, Uruguay, Israel, Australia, Mexico, France, Holland, Belgium, and Germany itself. "Some persecutees, few in number, refuse to testify for fear of reprisals," the report states. "Others, also a few, do not want to relive the horrors of the past." But the majority are eager to do all in their power to bring the Nazi criminals to justice. Former camp inmates are requested to write or telephone to the World Jewish Congress, 15 East 84th Street, New York City (TR 9-4500), giving as much information as they can testify to.

Food fads and new pills range from those supposed to give willowy lines, a Helen-of-Troy complexion, down to new vim-and-vigor. There isn't much evidence of such results. Keeping to a balanced diet, adjusted to put on or take off a few pounds, will usually achieve results. Even the muddy complexion may benefit, if the meals are allied to careful cleanliness.

countries. The program grew and grew.

In 1950, Hadassah, acting on its principle of pioneering programs and turning them over to the Jewish state when the moment is right, transferred the school lunch program to the Education Ministry by mutual agreement. Hadassah's Nutrition Department became a Government agency and Dr. Bavly a civil servant. Today the program is run in accordance with the same principles and aims with which it began, but it has come a long way from Miss Szold's pennies. The annual budget provides from 35 to 60 per cent of the daily requirements of no fewer than 120,000 school children who might otherwise go hungry. An additional 10,000 elementary school children of working mothers are also included in the program.

Each family pays something toward the monthly cost per child of IL.6.50 but the scale is graduated according to ability to pay. While some families can afford the entire sum, others pay as little as thirty agorot (15 cents) a month. The idea is that no child should feel embarrassed, that every child should feel that he is making a contribution and not receiving charity. There are now 200 schools in Israel with "teaching kitchens" where the pupils participate in food preparation and serving. In 250 other schools, luncheons are prepared on the premises but the teaching program has not yet been inaugurated. No fewer than 950 small schools and kindergartens, where enrollment does not warrant a full kitchen in the building, are serviced by central kitchens. All seventh and eighth grade children, however, are taught the principles of nutrition in the classroom.

The teaching personnel for the nutrition program is largely drawn today from the graduates of the College of Nutrition and Home Economics in Jerusalem, an institution which is rapidly bursting its buttons as its enrollment swells. The College was founded in 1953 with considerable aid from the UN's Food and Agricultural Organization, which provided much of the kitchen and laboratory equipment and helped with advice and staff fellowships.

Today the College is the focal point of Israel's home economics program. Under the leadership of Dr. Bavly, its Dean, the College provides a two-year course for future teachers of nutrition and home economics in elementary schools, trains teachers of the same subjects for vocational secondary schools, and, in a third course, prepares students for work as dieticians in hospitals and other institutions. A dynamic little school, the College of Home Economics has problems which only money can solve. Its present home is in a low, stucco building adjoining the Foreign Ministry with only two class rooms which, this year, proved unequal to the increase in registration from 70 to 100 students. Two additional rooms were found in separate buildings nearby, but both laboratory facilities and personnel are strained and one class-room in the home building must double as dining room. The Ministry of Education's budget does not, thus far, permit a move to new, larger quarters.

Meanwhile, the old building remains a center for activities which range far afield from the cramped quarters in which they originate. One staff member is in charge of six nutrition and home economics teachers who, annually, supervise 1,200 courses and exhibits across the country. Over 25,000 women a year are reached through these lectures and exhibits on the preparation of cheap, nourishing, in-season foods, which are held in cities and towns with a particularly high percentage of newcomers among their populations.

The College also provides advice and counsel to institutions and governmental bodies on questions of nutrition. Dr. Bavly herself serves as advisor to various state agencies and maintains contact with UN organizations concerned with feeding and nutrition. Recently she was a delegate to a joint FAO-World Health Organization Conference on Nutritional Education in Europe. (Israel properly belongs in the Middle East set-up, but regional headquarters are in inaccessible Cairo.) At the conference she found not only that "Israel has nothing to be ashamed of" in its approach to the problems of nutrition, but that other countries are beginning to sit up and take notice of the means which Israel employs.

One of the most valuable implements in licking malnutrition, Dr. Bavly feels, is the nutritional survey which scientifically assesses what people eat and how much good it does them. A veteran "surveyor," she did one field sampling with Hadassah in 1943, completed her doctorate at Columbia with a thesis on another in 1947, has made two Government nutrition surveys since. Dr. Bavly is now analyzing the results of an Israel-wide survey carried out last summer with a grant from UNICEF, which recently decided to augment its supplementary feeding program for children with nutritional education.

Recognizing Dr. Bavly's premise that education is impossible unless there is a preliminary survey to determine the nutritional "make-up" of any given country, UNICEF "employed" the entire graduating class of the College of Home Economics for a five-week period last summer and also paid a stipend to a Ministry of Health physician who, in a new wrinkle in nutritional surveys, tested the investigation's subjects for signs of malnutrition.

Blood specimens of those in the survey were sent to the Nutrition Laboratory of the Hadassah-Hebrew University Medical School for analysis, while the College students visited 20 families in each of 30 moshavim (smallholders' settlements) and patrolled the communal kitchens of 10 kibbutzim for a week to observe the total food intake in that period. In each case the total food consumption was noted, and in each case this food intake was computed into nutrients and compared with actual requirements. The full results of the survey are not yet known, but Dr. Bavly feels that it will emerge as a pilot-project for UNICEF to repeat in other countries.

ISRAEL READY TO PAY FOR PEACE

peace that recognizes the right of peoples to live, not one that denies them the right to exist.

"If we want peace in the long run we must develop the nerve power and the consistency to live indefinitely without peace. Israel will continue to push off war week by week, month by month, year by year. All pressure on our nerves and resources is preferred to the certainty of war, which is totally destructive today.

"While we are maintaining peace we will be building our country and our people and our institutions. We have risen from the dust for one and all. In Israel we are free and rooted as men, citizens and Jews."

Brandeis U. Gets Celebrated Da Vinci Collection

A private collection of material on Leonardo Da Vinci, considered by many experts to be among the most outstanding in the world, has been presented to the Brandeis University Library, at Waltham, Mass., by Bern Dibner, of Wilton, Connecticut, bibliophile and engineer. Almost 800 books, pamphlets, manuscripts, incunabula, and prints by and about Da Vinci are included in this collection, which has been consulted and used regularly by art historians and specialists in Da Vinci's life and times. The collection of Vinciana is part of a distinguished library on the history of science, originally housed in the Burndy Library at the site of Mr. Dibner's engineering firm in Norwalk, Conn., and now a part of the permanent collection of the Brandeis University Library.

The library of literature on the history of science includes many first editions of the works of Darwin, Galileo, and Kant, various incunabula and rare historical documents, and is considered one of the most comprehensive collections of this type ever assembled by an individual. The newly acquired collection of Vinciana, added to the 157 items in the original collection given to the University by Mr. Dibner, brings to almost 1,000 the number of separate pieces in the University's history of science library.

The Da Vinci collection, including such items as Johannes Regiomantanus's "Epitoma in Almagestum Ptolemai," a first edition of the Latin translation printed in Venice in 1496, and many other almost irreplaceable incunabula, will be housed in a special Hall designated by the University to honor Mr. and Mrs. Dibner in the University's recently completed Library. The Da Vinci Hall on the mezzanine floor of the Library Building will be especially equipped with desks and tables where researchers and scholars may utilize the collection. Part of the material will be kept in open bookshelves in the Hall to make it readily available, while the incunabula, manuscripts, and other rare books will be housed in specially designed glass bookcases. Many of the volumes are in the original vellum casings, while others are in the contemporary leather bindings of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries.

"The Da Vinci collection will not only be a valuable asset to scholars on Da Vinci and his times who visit our campus from all over the world," Dr. Sachar said in announcing the gift, "but it also represents the continued dedication of one man to higher learning. Since the founding of the University, Bern Dibner has been one of its most devoted friends. He has not only given to our young library some of its most distinguished collections, but has come forward time and again to provide means whereby we might continue to maintain and increase our scholarly collections."

Mr. Dibner, who lives on Woodway Lane, in Wilton, Conn., is president of Burndy Corp., an engineering firm with offices throughout the U.S. A Fellow of Brandeis University, he is also a Trustee of the Electrical Equipment Commitee of the Smithsonian Institute and a Fellow of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers. Mr. Dibner is founder and director of the Burndy Library, and the author of eleven volumes on the history of science.

Hunters who get lost in the bush often have to stay out overnight. It is a good idea to carry compressed food such as raisins, apricots, nuts, bouillion cubes, and tea bags. With one of the small Scout cooking outfits, a hot drink can give new energy. Waterproofed matches and a police whistle are useful to the lost person.

The Experience Of Twenty Years Of Welfare Fund Pays Off

BY FLORENCE HUTNER, EXECUTIVE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED JEWISH WELFARE FUND OF TORONTO, ONTARIO

Each generation faces its own challenges. The way in which it meets these challenges denotes its maturity. A community has its own problems, as it grows and expands; the marshalling and use of its resources in solving these problems are the tests of its stability and unity. In Toronto, the United Jewish Welfare Fund's role in the capital structure of the community has been the proving ground of the Jewish community's maturity.

Twenty years ago, the heavy burden of mortgages and bank loans on community buildings, schools, hospital, home for the aged, and other institutions, was costing the community large sums in yearly interest. Since these agencies were members of the Welfare Fund, it was felt that action to liquidate these debts would relieve the community of interest payments and release these funds to better purpose. A committee on capital needs and planning was appointed to study the problem, and its considerations and recommendations led to the first capital amalgamation plan of the Welfare Fund. It is significant that the first task of this committee was the redemption of past debts, the residue of the depression of the thirties. Over a span of six years, these capital debts of one hundred and sixty-four thousands of dollars were paid through the Welfare Fund inclusion of annual amounts towards these payments.

The next step in community planning was the replacement of old, remodelled, inadequate buildings by new structures to meet the needs of a growing population. The Mount Sinai Hospital was attempting to provide modern health treatment in an old structure that was partly re-constructed and partly new, greatly over-crowded and congested. The Jewish Old Folks' Home on Cecil Street was also in the same situation; old houses with narrow corridors, linked to a new wing, but wholly inadequate to meet modern standards for the care of the aged. The Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Association was attempting to carry on a program in a small, out-moded building attached to the Brunswick Avenue building of the Associated Hebrew Schools. These three essential services for the sick, the aged, and the youth were handicapped by obsolete buildings and lack of modern equipment.

The next stage in community consideration was therefore the planning of capital campaigns to raise funds to erect new buildings. To avoid over-lapping and competition in such capital campaigns, the committee on capital needs and planning, with the co-operation of the institutions, drew up a schedule for local capital campaigns, and over a period of approximately ten years, almost all necessary funds were raised by a series of capital appeals. Since building costs change from original estimates, initial funds raised for a building often prove to be inadequate when the time for construction arrives.

To meet the increased costs for two institutions, the new Jewish Home for the Aged and the Y.M. and Y.W.H.A., a combined building fund campaign was held for both these agencies in the first joint capital campaign held in the community. When the Jewish Home for the Aged was still faced with a building deficit, the Welfare Fund undertook to meet this deficit through annual allocations over a period of years, thus eliminating an additional capital campaign in the community.

Toronto is one of the urban centres which can be included in the description of an "Exploding Metropolis." The Jewish community now numbers 80,000 as compared to 66,000 in 1951. Whole areas of the city have changed in character, and new districts in the northern section have become populated by thousands of Jewish families. These movements in population have provided new challenges for a group of community institutions, the Y.M. and Y.W.H.A., and the Hebrew schools especially. The Welfare Fund sought and found a new formula for meeting the capital costs of additional buildings needed by these agencies; a formula which has been loosely described as "Incentive and Matching."

The formula is simple: the Welfare Fund has the right to make capital grants to approved building plans of its members agencies, to a maximum of fifty percent of approved building costs. In actuality, it means that the institution conducts a limited campaign among its own members and supporters for one portion of the approved building costs; the Welfare Fund, representing the contributions from the community-at-large, makes its contribution from its annual budget, supplied by the United Jewish Appeal. One obvious advantage is the reduction of campaign overhead and costs. A limited campaign to people who are acquainted with a program needs less literature and fewer staff, and has less percentage of loss in unfilled pledges.

As a result of this formula, ground has been broken for the North Toronto Y.M. and Y.W.H.A., and two new additions to the Bathurst Street branch of the Associated Hebrew Schools, and the Viewmount branch of the Talmud Torah Eitz Chaim will be ready this fall to accommodate more children. In each instance, the Welfare Fund has pledged its share of capital contribution, the institution has raised the balance from its devotees and supporters. And in each need, large-scale, community-wide campaigns for capital needs have been avoided. But an equally important community development has been the acknowledgment of the Welfare Fund's stability in undertaking such programs. The leaders of these institutions, and of the Welfare Fund have undertaken their individual responsibilities in unity of purpose.

The challenge of a growing community has therefore been met with the experience of over twenty years of Welfare Fund activity. It is almost an adoption of the Rumi pay-as-you go plan, spreading out capital commitments over a period of years. The people who will support the Welfare Fund for the next years will be participating in the upbuilding of community buildings, the development of which will be to their, as well as their parents', benefit. Large-scale capital campaigns have been avoided, costs of campaigns have been kept to a minimum, and the unity of community effort of which the Welfare Fund is the culmination and the fountain-head, is carried forward into another frontier of Jewish communal living.

Leader Urges U.S. Aid To Israel And Arab States

American economic aid to both Israel and the Arab states was urged by Rabbi Philip S. Bernstein, of Rochester, N.Y., chairman of the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, in testimony before the U.S. House Committee on Foreign Affairs. "Our Committee has favored economic aid for under-developed peoples. In the past, we have urged you to vote economic assistance for the Arab peoples, as well as for Israel. We continue to do this. We hope that economic development, which raises living standards, will help to reduce tensions in the area and bring about a peace settlement," Rabbi Bernstein said.

The ten Arab Ambassadors charged that the visit of Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion was part of a Zionist plot to undermine Arab-American relations. Rabbi Bernstein, in effect, repudiated this charge when he told the Committee: "We do not accept the Arab thesis that we must choose between the Israelis and the Arabs and that friendship for one precludes friendship for the other. We want our country to be the friend of Israel and the friend of the Arab peoples, and we want them to befriend each other. We are convinced that Israel and the Arab states have much to gain by cooperation and peace, and we work to bring that about."

While urging economic aid to both, Rabbi Bernstein questioned the wisdom of aiding any country if that aid is used to further that country's war against another. Rabbi Bernstein maintained that American aid should be used for peaceful purposes. He suggested that the Mutual Security Program be used as an "opportunity to reaffirm our traditional support for the freedom of the seas and our abhorrence of all boycotts and blockades, and our determination never to compromise with aggression wherever it may arise and in whatever form it takes.

"Is it right to grant aid without requiring the recipients of our aid to conform to the laws and standards of the international community? No nation has an automatic right to our assistance. No nation should be allowed to extort assistance from us merely by threatening to go to Moscow. Laws govern the relations of nations. We should not close our eyes to their violation."

Governor for my release. Once again, I was in a police car, which sped away towards Government House, in the Old City.

I was taken straight into the Governor's office — a very spacious oak-panelled room, with a thick oriental carpet covering the entire floor. The officer knocked on the door, opened it, announced my arrival and withdrew — closing the door behind me, as soon as I crossed the threshold.

At the far end of the room, facing the door, three men were sitting behidd an enormous, carved desk. I knew them all by sight. In the center, in an armchair with a taller back than the two others, was Mr. Keith-Roach. On his right was Auni Bey Abdul Hadi, the Governor's Arab assistant. The chair on his left was occupied by Captain Jacobs, the Jewish assistant, who was to perish seventeen years later in the explosion of the King David Hotel.

Unshaven, in yesterday's wrinkled shirt unadorned by a tie, and in Achimeir's ill-fitting jacket, I slowly walked the length of the chamber, stopping silently in front of the desk and facing the man in the center.

The silence was broken by the Governor, who delivered the following tirade: "Last night, when I, in fulfillment of my duties, came to the Hasolel Press, you behaved in such a manner that I could have punished you severely. But I realize that the closing of the Doar Hayom was a shock to you. Also, I do not want to hamper your career in this country. You are, therefore, free to go."

Without a word, I turned on my heels, and walked slowly out of the Governor's office.

Rabbi Says Orthodoxy Expands In Israel

Dr. Eliezer Ebner, Rabbi of Beth Aaron Synagogue, in Montreal, says:

In the May 20 issue of the Canadian Jewish Review there appeared a reprint from the New York Times under the headline, "A Message From Orthodox Jews", in which a so-called World Union of Orthodox Jewish Communities takes the Government of Israel severely to task for "religion being forcibly repressed in the State of Israel." May I state that despite the high sounding name of this group its identity is little known in Orthodox circles? Hence, they speak only for themselves and not for religious Jewry.

While it is true that some discriminations against religious Jews in Israel have been made and perhaps are still being made, the picture gained from this paid announcement in the New York Times is grossly exaggerated and slanderous. Surely, it is a poor expression of Orthodoxy to advertise to the non-Jewish world any criticism against fellow-Jews and detract from the stature of the State of Israel, beset as it is by enemies from without. This kind of publicity plays right into the hands of anti-Semites. Why don't these people go to Israel, settle there, and dedicate themselves to the advancement of our religion, instead of slandering it before non-Jews from a comfortable distance?

As one who returned recently from a third visit to Israel, I wish to say that I was impressed with the many manifestations of the expansion in depth and width of traditional Judaism. The Lord has placed upon our generation the task to create and develop the State of Israel and make it a home for any Jew who desires to live there. Let us be co-workers with the Almighty in this Mitzvah.
